About The Home

By Frances Dell

By Frances Dell

There is increasing interest today in the little iris. This seems to disprove the contention that American gardeners are interested only in big plants and flowers. These little iris occur in both the bearded and beardless types. Dwarf forms of beardless iris are found in the groups known as crested, bulbous and Oregon or Pacific Coast iris.

The dwarf bearded iris are chiefly forms and hybrids of Iris pumila, and the sand iris. Some of these are no more than three inches tall. With the exception of sand iris, which is somewhat tempermental, all dwarf bearded iris need the same cultural treatment as the better known tall bearded iris. All are early bloomers, and well suited to the rock garden. They can be used as an edging in beds of taller iris with great success.

Many of us take vitamins during the winter to build up resistance to colds and other winter miseries. But, comes summer, too often our vitamins are stored away with mothballs.

The need for vitamins does not automatically disappear with the season. Summer, with its strenuous outdoor activities and vacation sports consumes our reserves; and the torrid hot spells rob many people of their usual vitality.

Normal appetities wane as the thermometer rises, diets often become lop-sided—with further effects on general good health.

Summer is the time to continue taking vitamins to build up resistance for winter months. If you have been taking vitamins, don't stop now! And, if you haven't, why not check with your physician on the advisibility of beginning now. Let him also suggest the formula that is best for you and for your children.

We at (STORE NAME) feature a full selection of nationally known vitamins from makers of the highest ethical and pharmaceutical standards.
